Sankt-Peterburgskie Vedomosti

Sankt-Peterburgskie Vedomosti (St.-Petersburg News), the second oldest Russian newspaper, was founded in 1728 as the successor to Vedomosti o voennykh znaniakh i inykh delakh dostoinykh znaniia i pamiati (News about Events, Both Military and Otherwise, Fit Both to Know and to Remember), published from 1703-1727. Sankt-Peterburgskie Vedomosti (SPV) ran without interruption until World War I, thus making this paper one of the most important sources for the history of Imperial Russia during its final two centuries. It ran articles on industry, agriculture, trade, domestic and foreign policy, culture and education, and especially life in Petersburg. SPV was published twice a week, gradually increasing in size from four to forty pages. For several decades SPV was the only Russian periodical; it did not have to face competition until 1756, when Moskovskie Vedomosti (Moscow News) appeared.

SPV was owned by the Academy of Sciences. Its first editor, from 1728-1733, was Academician G.F. Muller. Throughout the eighteenth century the paper preserved an official character, reporting on events within the royal family, meetings for foreign diplomats, Russian contacts with foreign powers, wars occurring both within the Russian borders and in other more distant theaters. In addition to news about life at the Imperial Court, the paper covered governmental announcements and decrees, official appointments and promotions and provided descriptions of various ceremonies and meetings of the Academy of Sciences and other learned bodies. The announcements of fairs, wares and objects offered for sale, new publications and theater performances are particularly interesting, as is the information about the educational system, school curricula, public examinations, etc.

A supplement to SPV, Istoricheskie, genealogicheskie i geograficheskie primechaniia (Historical, Genealogical and Geographic Notes) -- the title varied from issue to issue -- published between 1728-1742, contains a great deal of information about culture and science.

A new period in SPV's long history began in 1836 when the editorial duties were assumed by

A.N. Ochkin. It was at this time that the paper took on a subheading -- Gazeta politicheskaiia i literaturnaia (Political and Literary Gazette) -- and began to devote an increasing amount of space to other topics and genres, such as short stories (original and translated), essays, serials, sketches from daily life of the capital, etc. The circulation for this period reached 4,000. These new tendencies culminated in the 1850s when A.A. Kraevskii, one of the most prominent and gifted Russian journalists of the nineteenth century, became co-editor. Other contributors, such as F. Dostoevskii, the novelists E.P. Romanov and A.V. Druzhinin, the poet A.N. Pleshcheev, reinforced this trend, causing the paper's circulation to rise to 10,000.

These developments, particularly the liberal direction assumed by the paper, were not in accord with the interests of the ruling circles, who made numerous attempts to return SPV to its original half-official character. The government finally removed both editors and assigned the position to the brilliant journalist V.F. Korsh in the hope that he would conform to the official position. On the contrary, during the period 1863-1874 the new editor acted with such independence that within a few months he managed to transform SPV into one of the most important and influential newspapers in Russia. By gathering together the best contemporary writers and publicists he was able to give the paper a distinctly liberal bias.

Among Korsh's colleagues the best known were the two extremely gifted publicists V.P. Burenin and A.S. Suvorin, who contributed serial installments about the life and names of that era, often accompanied by biting satire. Suvorin, for example, wrote half-belletristic sketches using subjects taken from the daily life of the capital. In 1866 he gathered these pieces together into one volume entitled Vsiakie (All Kinds of People). It was condemned and not until 1909 was it possible to have a second edition printed. Because of its unveiled criticism of certain official policies, SPV was seriously reprimanded by the Office of the Censor. In December 1874 Korsh was relieved of his duties.

During the nineteenth century many prominent writers and journalists published their works on the pages of SPV, including F. Dostoevskii, I. Turgenev, Saltykov-Shchedrin, K. Kavelin, L. Polonskii, the philosophers G.N. Vyrubov, E.V. de Roberti and V.S. Solov'ev, the music critics V.V. Stasov and C.A. Cuny (Kiuni), the literary critics K.K. Arsen'ev, the theater critic Tuneev and others.

Publisher's note
